

Billionaire's life

Tom Rochette <tom.rochette@coreteks.org>

February 8, 2020 — 46529c00

1 Question

If I were a billionaire, how would I live my life?

2 Answer

I would invest a good chunk of my money in doing research in the fields I'm interested in, namely biology, genetics, computer science, software engineering, machine learning and artificial intelligence.

I would spend my time trying defining what is the most important thing I could be working on given our current understanding and constraints in order to reach certain objectives.

I would want to get informed by the advice of the smartest people I can get.

I would pay others to help me get to my goals faster.

I would avoid having to deal with hardware constraints by simply purchasing more hardware.

I would try to trade the money I have to remove as much friction as possible in my work.

I would like to consider working on different things as having a variety of hobbies and not a variety of jobs.

I would avoid spending my time commuting.

I would eliminate the time I spend on cooking and cleaning.

I would maximize the effectiveness of my time, from the moment I wake up to the moment I go to sleep.

I would try to find ways to increase the number of people (or machines) that can help me.

I would try to find ways to make the fact that I'm a billionaire irrelevant to the accomplishment of everything I've stated here.